JULIANNA ON AMBASSADORSHIP

Rutgers University has provided me with limitless opportunities to achieve my potential as a leader and gain real-world experiences as an undergraduate student. As a first-year, the best advice I received from a professor was to make the most of my time here because it would flash by in a blink. I internalized that wisdom and tried to find my footing by joining extracurricular activities and becoming active on campus. I joined pre-professional organizations like the Pre-Law Society and the Rutgers Undergraduate Law Review, of which I am now the Editor-in-Chief. I also joined a sorority, finding my community of women and gaining valuable experience as the Vice President of Recruitment for Panhellenic.

As I have grown and flourished academically, I have been selected for honors societies for my majors along with Phi Beta Kappa. The most impactful organizations I have dedicated time to at the university have allowed me to give back through working in admissions. When I was a sophomore, I applied to become a Scarlet Ambassador, giving tours to prospective students and their families. After realizing how rewarding it was to influence someone's college decision, I applied to become an Honors Program Ambassador, climbing the ranks to become a Senior Ambassador last year.

It has been a joy to promote the Honors Program, a loving and thoughtful community that has given me access to a wide alumni network, unparalleled faculty, and a diverse collection of peers.
